Reasonable Adjustments in Employment FAQ

www.dls.org.uk

Introduction

Under the Equality Act 2010 (the EA), disabled people have certain rights at work and employers have some legal obligations towards their disabled employees.

One of the most important obligations placed on the employer is the legal duty to make reasonable adjustments to both the job role and the workplace to help their disabled employees.

What are reasonable adjustments?

Under the EA employers have a duty to make reasonable adjustments where failure to do so would place the disabled employee at a substantial disadvantage compared to non-disabled employees.

There are many different types of adjustments. Some examples include:

- Provision of special equipment
- Alterations to working hours
- Adjustments to a disabled employee's duties
- Redeployment to a different role in the workplace
- The provision of written information in a different format such as Braille or larger print or ensuring that there is a BSL signer available for meetings or interviews
- Allowing a disabled person time off for necessary medical appointments or treatment
- Physical alterations to the workplace such as ramped entrances, accessible toilets, reserved parking spaces close to the entrance, stair lifts
- The provision of a support worker to help a disabled employee with elements of their role that they are unable to complete alone due to their impairment

Whether or not a particular adjustment is reasonable will depend on the circumstances. When deciding whether a potential adjustment is reasonable there are a number of factors that can be taken into account. These include:

- the cost of making the adjustment
- the effect that this will have on the employer's business
- the resources, financial and other resources, available to the employer
- how effective the adjustment would be at removing the disadvantage.

Where a disabled employee requests an adjustment, it is for the employer to show that the adjustment requested is not reasonable and to justify their decision.

Can I get any help?

Access to Work is a scheme which is run by Jobcentre Plus. It can provide disabled people with financial support to help with increased costs for things such as travelling to work by taxi instead of using public transport, paying for a support worker, paying for specialized equipment or for physical alterations to the employer's premises.

Access to Work may also be able to help if a disabled person needs a communicator or BSL interpreter at a job interview.

Am I eligible for Access to Work?

If you are disabled and feel that you may need help through Access to Work you will need to be:

- Already working in paid employment
- Unemployed and about to start a new job
- Unemployed and about to start a Work Trial
- Self-employed

Your impairment must stop or prevent you from being able to do parts of your job or the job you have applied for. It may be that your impairment does not have a big effect on what you can do every day but it must be a long- term effect rather than something short-term like a broken arm.

How do I contact Access to Work?

If you feel that your employment is likely to be affected by your impairment and that this impairment is likely to last for at least 12 months, you should contact either your regional Access to Work contact centre or the Disability Employment Adviser at your local Jobcentre.
